

This Apple may be recommended as one of the best varieties of its season; its beautiful appearance and excellent flavour being such as to entitle it to a place in the dessert. It is not, however, calculated for culinary purposes. It is an abundant bearer, and, on espaliers particularly, is highly ornamental.

This Apple is well known in the Kingdom of France, where it is much cultivated. It is generally supposed to be a variety of Pomona Londinensis, and is cultivated in the same manner. The fruit is large, round, and of a deep red colour, with a greenish yellow tinge. It is very juicy, and has a sweet, but not very strong, flavour. It is a very early variety, and is one of the best for the dessert. It is also a very abundant bearer, and is highly ornamental when cultivated on espaliers.

It is a very early variety, and is one of the best for the dessert. It is also a very abundant bearer, and is highly ornamental when cultivated on espaliers.